

Today was our 4th day in Gran Canaria. It was a very windy day and we were late for school.

At first we had biology together, where they learned something about volcanos but this was everything I could understand. After biology we had Spanish class.

In Spanish they did something about classic literature.

Then the German group went to Las Arenas with the teachers, where we ate sandwiches and cheeseballs.

After eating, we went back to school and the Spanish music class presented something about the traditional music, dances and singers in the Canary Islands.

Then we listened to a teacher and a student, who played a song they composed and afterwards we tried to write lyrics to this melody about the exchange.

At the end of the school day a part of the group played UNO no mercy, where I had to pick up 58 cards and the others played basketball or read their books.

After school had ended for the Spanish students, we went back to their place and ate lunch. Afterwards we went back to the city and met with the rest of our group but without the teachers and went to a science museum.

Unfortunately, we needed an adult to visit the museum and luckily our teacher was able to come, so we could all go. As we waited for Mr. Ernst to come, we saw two parrots.

The museum was very interesting. It had a station, where we could try on VR glasses, rooms in different colours and lots of other interesting things.

At the end of the day, we went to McDonalds to eat something before we went home and tried to sleep.
